Do It (for Dave)

This is the penultimate Jenny. Anything you have to say you better get it said before noon Friday or we're going up without you.

And on that point, I'm sure a few of our staunch contributors are wondering why we've gone up without them repeatedly.

Simple. They've written reviews of shows that have all ready been covered in the Jenny. As I've said many times over the years (It's true! You could look it up at www.jennyrevue.com), Jenny prioritizes reviews of shows getting their first coverage, followed by first time writers, and finally the double repeaters.

Historically, by Monday's issue, Jenny is replete with reruns; and the SSPs we solicit from the performers has dwindled to a trickle.

This year, everything is different. In addition to the gargantuan response to the SSP call, the presence of 182 shows (along with Jenny's rule that our staffers have to stick to not yet reviewed shows), it's been nearly impossible to incorporate repeats when the copy file of new shows grows every day.

So don't fret, earnest and articulate scribes. It's not you. It's us. (And we put you on the web.)

Dave down—The Jenny has always relied on Daves. And while Pruden and Cramer contribute to every issue we publish, there's a third Dave who, aside from being the subject of the July 20, 2010 frontpage column, has largely toiled in obscurity, while donating huge amounts of time, energy and creativity to the donkey goddess. (I mean Jenny, not me—though that too.)

He built the original Jenny boxes (there's one just inside the King's Head door), and the original wooden donkey trophy. He's served as tech at Jenny Prevues and Awards Shows, contributed art to early issues, given us office space, been our photographer, and, while still in possession of a vehicle, chauffeured yours truly to and from the Fringe.

On June 29th, while heading home down Wellington Street on a recently acquired bicycle, he collided with a truck and the resultant head trauma put him in a coma for four days.

In fact, when they transported him from the Grace where the ambulance originally took him (stupid catchment area rules) to HSC, the neurosurgeon on call figured he was already brain dead and nearly didn't operate. But he did, and a month later Dave is ensconced at Riverview's traumatic brain injury rehab, clearly articulating his displeasure with hospital food. And he was able to phone me last night.

There's still a long rehab road ahead of him and to help him along, there will be a benefit concert at Times Change(d) High and Lonesome Club, 234 Main on Monday, August 27.

Music starts 8-ish.

Featured will be Dave's old band mates from the Magnificent 7's and others, including some of the Dust Rhinos (who formed their nucleus at The Toad in the Hole when Dave's family owned it and he was the guy who ran the music end of things there).

The full roster of entertainment hasn't been set yet, so keep an eye out for various Facebook updates.

Admission is pay what you can. Now I know what some of you are thinking, 'cause I'm poor, Scottish, and from Winnipeg.

You're thinking "Hey, we can see the Dust Rhinos and the Mag7's for free!"

Wrong.

First off it's a benefit. So if you think you can drop a looney in the donations can while holding on to that $20 for beer, please buy a 6 pack, stay home and wait for the inevitable YouTube vids. Also, there's no full band confirmation from the Rhinos, and as to the 7's, the core group haven't played together in over two years, or with original member Chris Bodnarchuk for over 5, and never without Dave, so a Mag 7s reunion is unlikely. After all, they want to make him smile, not cry.

I'll give you the scoop tomorrow on the Fabulous Jenny Awards, scheduled Sunday night 11ish at the King's Head. Now we must press ahead—I'm pressing mine to my pillow.

Blood Type: RAGU

Bon Vivant Enterprises—Planetarium

This is an entertaining story that is delivered expertly. The events are funny and poignant, and the delivery is quick.

In fact, I found the pace a little too fast. The narrative often starts in Italian followed by an English translation (in a heavy Italian accent). By the time I processed what happened, Frank is well into his next story.

As a first generation Canadian, I sure can relate to his (mis)adventures, often cringing as I feel his pain.

Ray Yuen

Eurydice

Hollow Leg Theatre Co.—Alloway Hall (MMMN)

This is a Greek tragedy with a modern twist.

The superior acting of the main characters pulls you into their world. You feel for the protagonists and you quickly hate the villains.

I studied some Greek mythology in my life but I'm not at all familiar with this story. I'm not sure how true this rendition is to the mythological tale but if your spirits are down, this play won't help you at all.

Ray Yuen

One Man Lord of the Rings

One Man Lord of the Rings—PTE Mainstage

I followed the fringe call of my fellow nerdy people to check out one man's attempt to cram 3 epic movies into 75 minutes.

It would seem that it couldn't be done, BUT in the capable hands of Charles Ross it was beautifully accomplished! I could tell instantly what character he was playing at any given time because of the amount of detail put into each character.

That being said, the play is very, very dense and I (an avid Tolkien fan) had trouble keeping up. The volume also was a huge issue. I found myself plugging my ears for most of the show because it was so loud.

While this is a family friendly show, I would strongly suggest only bringing little one's if they are familiar with the material or they will most likely have a hard time keeping up.

Kaitlyn Kriss

Teacher in the House

Watson Arts—Alloway Hall (MMMN)

Susan Jeremy is a marvel in Teacher in the House. The New York actress and teacher shares lessons in life learned through her experiences teaching special needs children confined to their homes by illness or disability.

Jeremy populates the stage with more than dozen multi-cultural characters age six to eighty. With her well-tuned ear and gift for accents, Jeremy presents each and every member of her cast as an individual personality so there's never any confusion as to who is who.

A diagnosis of breast cancer transforms Jeremy's familiar daily routine of battling Manhattan traffic to be with her students into a life and death struggle to beat the disease. Jeremy shares her story with sensitivity and humour; drawing courage, strength and inspiration from her young charges in her transition from teacher to patient and cancer survivor.

Teacher in the House is a must see for anyone whose life has been touched by the disease, either personally or through someone close. A brave, enduring work presented by a masterful, multi-character Fringe theatre performer.

Reg Clayton

Nothing to Declare

Erik de Waal—Planetarium

This man has seen some things, and listening to him talk about them is fascinating.

He could talk about his life for hours and I would still be interested at the end of it. He's funny, engaging, and really knows what he's doing.

Definitely put it on your list if you haven't already.

Arden Pruden

Matthew Harvey is...Dangerman!

Yorkshire Pudding Prods.—Cinematheque

The whole show is absolutely hilarious.

His segues from poem to poem are all clever and funny, and he's great to watch perform. He knows exactly how to work a crowd.

After all these serious spoken word shows, it's refreshing to see someone doing it for a laugh, and being good at it too.

Arden Pruden

3 Day Rave

Byrd Entertainment—Playhouse Studio

3 Day Rave was exactly what I thought it would be. Three besties tripping balls at a rave and the adventures and people they encounter.

What I did not expect was for it to be 100% true and have a very important message at the end. I did laugh a few times and it was amusing to watch these best friends bumble around the festival.

This one-man show could have benefited from having more than one actor on stage. You could tell the actor was very inexperienced and the beginning was incredibly sloppy. I did not like this play to begin with, but eventually it got better and I left with a completely different attitude. There are an alarming amount of drug references in this play, so I would probably leave mom and the kids at home.

Kaitlyn Kriss

Leland Klassen: Are My Hands Too Big?

Leland Klassen—RRC

Leland Klassen is the first completely clean comic I've seen at this festival ever. His jokes were funny and to the point. I loved that he addresses and converses with the audience throughout the show.

I chuckled quite a few time, but thought he relied a little too heavily on hand-related jokes (and yes they are freakishly huge).

The Mennonite jokes were on point, and half the audience (who I'm guessing were Mennonite) damn near died from laughing so hard.

Leland is a chuckle that is kid safe.

5-Step Guide to Being German

Paco Erhard—WECC Acu Hall

I really enjoyed this charming and funny stand-up! His observational humor spans the globe and while I laughed, I accidentally learned a few things—but not on purpose.

I hear he's been selling out his entire run but Lo! There be a hold over! Monday July 27th. I would so strongly recommend anyone who missed this show (or will miss it) during the fringe to go see him on Monday!

Theresa Thomson

Paco Erhard's show is a delight. Paco relates personal stories, and challenges stereotypes by playing to the Winnipeg audience with jokes about Slurpees and Regina. The show is less a step-by-step instruction on how to be German as the title suggest, and more a discussion of culture and identity.

Much of Paco's humour revolves around German cultural identity and the difficulties of being German, yet so much of the material is utterly universal. The hour goes by far too quickly.

Paco's energy and sense of delight were infectious, though the crowd was a little quiet when I attended.

The jokes are quick, the humour is clever and the performance is wonderful.

(And, I heard tell there will be a hold-over show Monday night at 8, so there'll be another chance to enjoy this fabulous performer.

Christina Fawcett

The Last 5 Years

Fountain of Time Prods.—Asper Centre (U of W)

This tremendously talented crew presents a raw look at what happens when couples aren't on the same page with each other. It examines how we drift apart in relationships and how sometimes things just can't be fixed.

Alternating between timelines, Cathy searches her memories of the past 5 years to find where things went wrong. Jamie, on the other hand, charges forward towards his very unhappy fate.

Both actors have phenomenal voices, and gave truly stunning vocal performances. I could feel Cathy's emotions and really rooted for her in the end. On the other hand, I had a tough time feeling much emotion for Jamie

This play did feel a little long. It's a very safe musical that you can certainly bring mom too. A few f-bombs here and there but definitely worth seeing if you are a fan of musicals.

Kaitlyn Kriss

The Inventor of All Things

big word performance poetry—King's Head

Jem has left his usual percussive, punchy poetry to move into slower, studied, Szilard-centric stories. This is an historical study in how one strange man changed the shape of the world. Jem says his goal is to have everyone leaving the show thinking Szilard is a really big hero.

The pacing of the show is interesting, as he explains why he's doing the show part way into the stories, but the movement between historical framework and fun anecdotes keeps the audience engaged and the stories are fascinating.

Jem's powerful voice gives the stories punch and his body language to indicate the direct quotations from the shockingly pompous Szillard make the moments that much funnier.

This could be the most interesting history lesson you've ever had.

Christina Fawcett

H.U.N.K.S.

Wasteland Productions—Alloway Hall (MMMN)

This one started out slow—as slow as quick sketches can be. It took me a while to find any of it particularly funny, but once they found their rhythm it was a solid show, and ran like a well-oiled machine.

While the sketches generally weren't my particular cup of tea, the rest of the audience seemed to be having a good time, so credit where credit is due.

Arden Pruden

Eleanor's Story: An American Girl...

Offending Shadows Prods.—Alloway Hall (MMMN)

Allies saved the world from the Germans—that's what the history books teach—but what about the people?

Eleanor is an American who had the misfortune to be on route to Germany as World War II was declared. The audience sees the war through her eyes, as related by Ingrid, her granddaughter,

While staying in the light and annunciation seemed to be difficult for Ingrid at times, she was still able to touch our hearts. With well-designed sound and lighting, creative and purposeful sets, and a story that should be heard by all, this is a production with an ability to break through propaganda and misconceptions; something I'd love to see shown to history students across the continent.

Erica Mitchell

Dance Pants

Randy Rutherford Presents—PTE Mainstage

This is probably Randy Rutherford's best show! He is a great storyteller and a great musician!

This is a new story about his life after Alaska. Unlike his coming-of-age story My Brother Sang Like Roy Orbison, this is the coming to terms with middle age and deafness but told with the same attention to detail and connection to '50s and '60s music.

Peggy Barker

Marathon

Big Sandwich Productions—WECC Ventura Hall

TJ Dawe's new monologue show catches us up with the years since his last Fringe appearance.

It is largely focused on his experiences with the personality type system The Enneagram. He deftly discusses how it has helped him figure out his own personality, the personality of others and what work he needs to do to avoid falling prey to the same self-defeating blind spots that each of us has.

That discussion is woven into a tale of his time in high school and experiences on the high school track team.

It was a fascinating subject that makes you reflect on your own personality and behaviors.

Murray Hunter

SHYLOCK

By the Book Productions—Cinematheque

At the beginning and at the end of this production, sole actor, John Huston recites famous excerpts of text spoken by the character Shylock in Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice, while fully inhabiting that character.

In between, his character is an actor who has taken considerable flak for portraying this supposedly stereotypical and negative Jewish personage in Shakespeare's supposedly anti-Semitic play, and who defends that role and that play.

It is essentially a play about a play, but, more deeply, this show is a lengthy (90-minute) meditation on various aspects of the philosophy of art. What is the purpose of art? Do changing societal mores make some art obsolete and unacceptable? What is the limit to which we should allow art to challenge us, before it becomes potentially dangerous?

This show clearly supports the ongoing staging of The Merchant of Venice, but it also raises questions for which there are no simple answers. Best of all, Huston keeps things captivating throughout.

Konrad Antony

Revenge of the Meek

Thin Lizotte—Warehouse

In our day and age everything is commercialized, including religion to some extent. The more you know about Christianity the more you'll enjoy this show, that much is certain, and even with my limited knowledge I had a great time.

The scenes were quick, as was the dialogue, and as long as you remember satire exists for a reason, you'll certainly enjoy this show. Definitely worth checking out, and I really dug the music.

Arden Pruden

Hot Thespian Action: Back in Black

Hot Thespian Action—Gas Station Arts Centre

Hot Thespian Action is back with fresh new funny skits!

I found all of the jokes surprising and loved the fresh take on some old stereotypical ideas. Adorable and quirky, this loveable troupe has some of the most expressive faces in the festival.

These festival favourites sell out for a very good reason so make sure to go early to get tickets!

Kaitlyn Kriss

Now What?

Girl Meets Boy—Rachel Browne Th. (Crocus Bldg.)

A story we see every month at the movies, but this time with a bigger message. It uses the foundational story of boy meets girl, get married etc. to deliver a much more meaningful story of how we connect with one another.

They incorporate the art of Contact Theatre at a level that is both interesting for theatre enthusiasts and those new to the community alike.

The lighting and set designs, though simple, were to the point, well timed and complemented production as a whole.

The sound needs to be slightly quieter, as the performers are difficult to hear.

Well worth your time!

Erica Mitchell

The Unchosen One

Ditch Water—Son of Warehouse

This is a very physical show, and with the amount of times she switches from character to character it certainly seems like it would benefit from being more than a one woman cast. She did a very good job of keeping characters straight but the more characters that are in a scene the harder it gets to keep track.

Honestly though, that is my only complaint. It was well acted and funny, and made fun of all the fantasy tropes we've come to know and love.

Arden Pruden

Dreamscape: our dreams told through dance

Viva Dance Company—MTC Mainstage

I don't generally like dance shows, but I was really sad when this one ended. I had such a strong connection with the 6 artists on stage that I was bawling by the second dance.

The stories are really moving and easy to connect with. The program write-up made it easy for me to follow the message, and the intentions were clear. Crisp images were displayed for an hour and I was truly moved.

One song became way too repetitive and that ending really disappointing. I expected something more after watching these talented ladies dance for an hour. It's a solid show with a simple and easy to follow story.

Theatre of the Beat—Rudolf Rocker CC

This show is a charming and endearing expression of the vibe of an upcoming marriage.

Of particular note were the amazing set changes. Not only where they clean, but very interesting to watch, and went very smoothly.

The narration flowed well with the scenes, the show was amazingly choreographed, and it made for a smooth ride.

Fair warning—the show I saw was sold out. Get tickets for this one fast.

Peter 'n Chris and the Kinda OK Coral

PFK Productions—Gas Station Arts Centre

Ho boy was this show a hoot! Beyond wacky, and meta as all hell, this play was a riot! I can see why this loveable duo was picked for Just for Laughs.

This play doesn't take itself seriously, and the duo has a heck of a lot of fun with it. Through mime they created one of the most realistic bar fights I've ever seen, even though there was zero set.

This talented duo managed to throw in a bajillion references and even though they were all out of the blue, they fit within the spirit of the show, and added to the insanity of it all.

If nothing else go for the beautiful bromance that is Peter and Chris.

Kaitlyn Kriss

Dr. Caligari's Cabaret of Change

The Improbable Cast—Warehouse

You've heard at LEAST one person talk about "The Fringe Family/Community", but I don't believe you truly understand it until you've experienced the annual midnight cabaret.

In a mere 90-ish minutes (late start and late end) performers, patrons, volunteers and Fringe staff came together to both name a baby (for real?) and give birth (definitely a performance).

While one audience member had a few too many before the show, he was only minorly distracting.

Like any good fringe there were some good, some not so good, and some absolutely stunning performances Highlights include: the APPocalypse, a flashlight showdown, literally flying flyers, a Rabbit Rave, and let's just say the mayonnaise will never die.

Be sure to check out next year's Cabaret! And please, light performers responsibly.

Erica Mitchell

From Broadway to Obscurity

Winnipeg Studio Theatre—PTE - Mainstage

In this one-man show, Eric Gutman presents his life story as an actor, starting in second grade when he is cast as Toto in The Wizard of Oz, gaining experience in various productions, and struggling through "constant auditions and rejections" in New York and other places.

A more apt title for this show might be "From Obscurity to Broadway to Obscurity", as Gutman spends a fair amount of time relating his experiences as one of countless young actors competing to break into the business. Luckily, he eventually lands a role in Jersey Boys, the story of Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons. He does over 1200 shows, on tour and on Broadway, before giving it all up

Gutman ultimately spends less time focusing on the abandonment of his career to raise a family, than he does on his long path to recognition. As he does, he sings a variety of songs from well-known musicals, while providing an insider's perspective on the struggle as well as success in his field.

Anyone well-versed in musicals will delight in all the references to them, but even those with less knowledge can still enjoy Gutman's story and singing. A highlight of the show is the single time he picks up the acoustic guitar, and strums and sings the romantic ballad Gold (from the musical Once) in a folk-rock style, instead of singing along to pre-recorded musical accompaniment.
